Antonio MAZZOLA

He is full professor of Ecology since 2000 at University of Palermo, currently President of CoNISMa (Interuniversity National Consortium for the Study of Marine Sciences). For the University of Palermo former Director of the Department of Animal Biology, Department of Ecology and Department of Earth and Sea Sciences and member of the Academic Senate. Project leader of more than 50 projects funded by EU (FP6-FP7), Italian Government, Sicilian Government, Authorities of Natural Reserves and Marine Protected Areas, University of Palermo, Environmental Agencies. His research activities is mainly focused on the trophic ecology of marine ecosystems with special focus on the effects of anthropogenic pressures including contamination, eutrophication and ocean acidification on trophic functioning and food web structure. Other research interests are related to aquaculture and mariculture, with a focus on new cultured species, sustainable development and environmental impacts; management of the coastal zone; environmental contamination. He is author of more than 180 publications many of which on ISI journals (H-index 43; Citations: 5869 (from Google Scholar).